

Public Workshop #3 Recap

On December 19, the City held the third and final workshop for a new water feature at Wilson Park. Over 150 comments were received from the public during the design process, which culminated in a draft design plan presented at the third workshop (seen below).

As we move on to the next phase of the project, what ultimately replaces the current fountain will be inspired by the engagement process and take into consideration site conditions better understood once excavation begins, as well as construction and maintenance costs, City ordinances and Department of Natural Resources regulations, and safety. The City sincerely appreciates everyone who took part in this creative experiment and took the time to attend one of our workshops or provide feedback through the surveys, by phone, or email.
